

Action And Linking Verb Worksheet

Mastering Verbs: Why an Action and Linking Verb Worksheet is Essential for Grammar Success

Understanding the difference between action verbs and linking verbs is a foundational skill in English grammar. For students, teachers, and homeschooling parents, an action and linking verb worksheet serves as one of the most effective tools for building this knowledge. Without a solid grasp of how verbs function, learners often struggle with sentence structure, subject-verb agreement, and even reading comprehension. This article explores every aspect of action and linking verbs, explains why worksheets are invaluable, and provides actionable insights for creating or using them effectively.

Whether you are a fifth-grade teacher preparing a grammar unit, a tutor helping a struggling student, or a parent supplementing classroom instruction, incorporating a well-designed action and linking verb worksheet can transform confusion into clarity. Let’s dive deep into what these verbs are, how to distinguish them, and why targeted practice matters.

What Are Action Verbs?

An action verb expresses a physical or mental action. It tells what the subject of a sentence does, has done, or will do. Action verbs are dynamic—they describe movement, activities, or processes. Examples include run, jump, think, calculate, write, climb, and decide. In the sentence “The dog barks loudly,” the word barks is an action verb because it describes an observable physical action. Similarly, in “She considers the options carefully,” considers is a mental action verb.

When students first learn about verbs, action verbs are usually the easiest to identify because they often involve something concrete. However, the challenge arises when verbs appear in contexts where they do not show action but instead link the subject to additional information. This is where a thorough action and linking verb worksheet becomes indispensable.

What Are Linking Verbs?

Linking verbs, in contrast, do not express action. Instead, they connect the subject of a sentence to a word or phrase that describes or identifies the subject. The most common linking verb is to be in all its forms: am, is, are, was, were, be, being, been. Other common linking verbs include seem, become, appear, look, feel, taste, smell, sound, grow, remain, and stay. For example, in “The cake smells delicious,” smells is a linking verb because it connects the subject cake to the adjective delicious, describing the cake rather than an action.

One reason linking verbs confuse learners is that some verbs can function as either action or linking verbs depending on context. For instance, look can be an action verb (“She looks at the painting”) or a linking verb (“She looks tired”). A high-quality action and linking verb worksheet specifically targets these nuances through varied exercises.

Why Worksheet Practice Matters

Grammar concepts are best learned through repeated, focused practice. Lectures and reading alone rarely cement understanding. When students complete an action and linking verb worksheet, they engage in active learning: reading sentences, underlining verbs, classifying them, and writing their own examples. This multisensory approach reinforces neural pathways, making it more likely that students will recall the distinction later.

Worksheets also provide immediate feedback opportunities. Teachers can quickly assess which students confuse linking verbs with action verbs and offer targeted reteaching. For self-directed learners, answer keys allow instant verification. Moreover, worksheets can be adapted for different grade levels, from simple identification tasks in third grade to complex sentence analysis in middle school.

Key Features of an Effective Action and Linking Verb Worksheet

Not all worksheets are created equal. An effective action and linking verb worksheet should include a variety of exercise types to cater to different learning styles. Below are essential components that educators and parents should look for:

Clear Instructions and Examples

Before students begin, the worksheet should provide a brief explanation of action and linking verbs, along with a couple of illustrative examples. This serves as a quick refresher and sets expectations. For instance, a top-of-page box might state: “An action verb tells what the subject does. A linking verb connects the subject to a description or rename.”

Identification Exercises

The most common task is to read a list of sentences and underline or circle the verb, then label it as action (A) or linking (L). This straightforward format builds confidence. For example:

- The children played in the park. (A)
- That man is my uncle. (L)
- The soup tastes salty. (L)
- He writes poems every night. (A)

Fill-in-the-Blank Exercises

Providing sentences with a missing verb and offering a word bank forces students to consider both meaning and function. Should the blank be filled with an action verb like ran or a linking verb like seems? This encourages critical thinking about sentence structure.

Distinguishing Verbs That Can Be Both

Advanced worksheets include sentences where verbs like appear, grow, smell, feel, prove are used in both ways. For example:

- The roses smell wonderful. (Linking)
- The chef smells the soup. (Action)

Asking students to explain why the verb functions differently in each sentence deepens understanding.

Writing Original Sentences

Production tasks challenge students to create sentences using a given verb as both an action verb and a linking verb. For instance, using look in two original sentences. This not only tests comprehension but also enhances overall writing skills.

Error Correction

Some worksheets present sentences with verb errors (e.g., using an action verb where a linking verb is needed or vice versa) and ask students to correct them. This requires a higher level of analysis.

Sample Exercise Ideas for Your Worksheet

If you are creating your own action and linking verb worksheet, consider including the following types of exercises to maximize learning:

Multiple Choice Sentences

Provide a sentence with the verb underlined, and offer two options: “This verb is: a) action verb b) linking verb.” This format works well for quick quizzes.

Sorting Activity

List ten verbs (e.g., run, is, become, jump, seem, taste, think, remain, feel, dance) and ask students to sort them into two columns: Action Verbs vs. Linking Verbs. This helps with memorization of common linking verbs.

Sentence Rewriting

Give a sentence with a linking verb and ask students to rewrite it using an action verb that conveys similar meaning, or vice versa. For example, change “She is happy” to “She smiles happily.”

Integrating Worksheets into a Broader Grammar Lesson

An action and linking verb worksheet works best as part of a scaffolded lesson. Start with a direct instruction session where you model identifying verbs using a short passage. Then move to guided practice with a worksheet, where you work through the first few sentences together. Finally, assign independent worksheet completion. Consider using a second worksheet as homework or a formative assessment.

For remote learning or blended classrooms, digital versions of worksheets can be created using Google Forms or interactive PDFs. These allow automatic grading and immediate feedback, which enhances engagement.

Common Mistakes Students Make and How Worksheets Address Them

Even after initial instruction, students commonly misidentify linking verbs as action verbs. For example, they might think seems is an action because it “feels” like a mental process. A targeted action and linking verb worksheet that includes sentences with sensory verbs like looks, sounds, feels in both contexts helps clarify that the verb’s function depends on whether it is describing a state or an action. Another frequent error is forgetting that be verbs are almost always linking (except in passive voice, which is a separate lesson). Worksheets that drill the eight forms of to be are particularly useful.

Additionally, students often confuse linking verbs with helping verbs. Helping verbs (like can, will, have) work alongside action verbs to form verb phrases. Worksheets that isolate linking verbs and exclude helping verbs reduce this confusion.

Benefits for Different Learning Levels

For early elementary learners, simple worksheets with pictures and single-word verbs help introduce the concept. For upper elementary and middle school, worksheets can incorporate compound subjects and predicates, challenging students to find verbs in more complex sentences. High school and ESL learners benefit from worksheets that include academic vocabulary and nuanced usage, such as appear, prove, remain.

An advanced action and linking verb worksheet might also include sentences with predicate nominatives and predicate adjectives, reinforcing the idea that linking verbs connect to nouns or adjectives that rename or describe the subject. For example: “She became a doctor” (predicate nominative) versus “She became tired” (predicate adjective).

Tips for Teachers and Parents

- Use color coding: Have students highlight action verbs in blue and linking verbs in red. Visual cues reinforce memory.
- Create a verb anchor chart: Post a list of common linking verbs in the classroom or at home. Refer to it during worksheet time.
- Incorporate movement: For kinesthetic learners, ask them to act out action verbs while stating linking verbs calmly. This physical distinction helps.
- Pair worksheets with games: After completing a worksheet, play a quick game of “Verb Charades” where students guess if the verb is action or linking.
- Teach the “substitution trick”: To test if a verb is linking, try replacing it with a form of to be. If the sentence still makes sense (e.g., “The girl feels happy” → “The girl is happy”), it’s likely a linking verb.

Conclusion

Mastering the distinction between action and linking verbs is a pivotal step in developing strong grammar skills. An action and linking verb worksheet provides the structured, repetitive practice necessary to internalize this concept. Whether used in a classroom, during tutoring sessions, or at home, these worksheets offer clear benefits: they improve sentence analysis, enhance writing clarity, and build confidence in young learners. By selecting or designing worksheets that include varied exercises, clear examples, and opportunities for creative application, educators can ensure that students not only understand the difference but can apply it fluently in their own writing. Start with a quality worksheet today, and watch your students' grammar skills grow.
